Self-Reliance.

There is no one element in a man's character that contributes more to his success in life than confidence or self-reliance in his own ability. A faint-hearted man is unstable, and will never exect. Faith in the endeavor to will and to exccute is as important in a successful business career as is the keystone to the arch. A man possessed of a bold, daring, and resolute will may be modest in revealing his powers, but will be determined in performing what he conceives to be right. To men with this never dying faith there is no such word as defeat, and when obstacles present themselves in their path it only results in their putting forth a greater effort to accomplish their purpose. Toil, trial, disaster, gloom, and danger may environ and threaten to overthrow the most cherished plans, yet over and above all hindrances an heroic soul will triumph and win fame and honor. The discouragements that retard the irresolute only discover the weak places to the brave, and, strengthening these, they renew the conflict with increased vigor. Timidity creates cowards, and never wins suc cess. It is a strong and abiding faith in one's own ability to perform that overcomes difficulties that others thought could not be sur-

In all the pursuits of life we find that those who achieve honer and distinction are strong from anything that can injure the most delicate and self reliant in their own powers exercise taith in their own ability, and carry out plans conseived in their own brain. Morse had faith in telegraphic wires, and Field in sub marine cables, and to day, in consequence thereof, the lightning is harnessed to convoy the news of the world in every part of the habitable globe with in the compass of a few hours. Two young men in 1862 commenced a banking business in Wall street in a small office. They had faith in their own ability and also that of the United States to pay its great war debt. To day they are the leading bankers in government scentities on this continent, their daily sales running into the millions, and their name and credit take high rank in all the financial centers of the world. Not many years ago Edison occapied an bumble position as a telegraph operator; to day his It imparts a Natural Color, acts Instane name and fame are world wide as associated and is as liarmioss as spring water. with some of the grandest direct, ries of accient sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt or modern times. Astor, Stewart and Vanderbilt furnish examples in the large fortunes they created as to what well directed energy and determination can accomplish in busness pursuits, while the eventful life of the late Judge Packer is another striking illustration of the high position that can be attained by reli-ance and perseverance in the individual man, backed by a liberal endowment of common sense. In the ever widening paths of commerce and the ever increasing monetary circles there open up before the young men of the nation rare opportunities to win wealth and fortune. In agricultural, mining, industrial, and mercantile pursuits like avenues to attain distinction are presented. But fortune will not come by chance nor distinction by hazard; both must be won by strong heroic endeavor. Backbone is vital in achievement of lofty aims, and nerve and grit are essential requisites in the battle of life. A man, to triumph, must have faith in his enter prise and reliance in his ability. THE GOOD OLD DEACON .- The squibs u!tered against New England deacons have little or no justification. If a tub of butter or barrel of apples is made up of alternate layers of good and bad, it is said to be "desconed." The epithet does not refer to the character of deacons, but an cli practice of "deaconing" a Fifty or sixty years ago hymn books were not so common as they now are. Some churches owned only two books. It was then the custom for one of the deacous to read two lines of a hymo, which the congregation sung. Other lines were read and suog in the same way, until the hymn was sung through. As a class, deacons have been the most trusted and influential men of New England villages. If a man died leaving property and a family, the descon was made one of the executors, and the guardian of the widow and the fatherless. If the neigh bors had a dispute about property, they 'leti it out' to the deacen. Was a sou wayward, the good deacon was called as frequently as the
